From the Nobel laureate Toni Morrison reflecting on her friendship with Maya Angelou to the Pulitzer Prize-winning poet Tracy K. Smith writing about the wisdom of her grandmother, these essays offer a kaleidoscope of perspectives on the people who have shaped the lives of some of the most influential voices in literature today.

The writers in this collection share stories of mentors who ignited their passion for writing, friends who provided unwavering support during challenging times, and family members who fostered their creativity and imagination. They celebrate the teachers who inspired their love of language and the librarians who opened up new worlds through books.

Through these moving and insightful essays, readers will discover the profound impact that human connection can have on our lives. They will be inspired by the transformative power of mentorship, the unwavering bonds of friendship, and the enduring love of family. Most importantly, they will be reminded of the importance of expressing gratitude to those who have made a difference in our lives.
